Performance Measurement Methodology Statement

Document reference: MPA-METH-2025-04
Version: 4.2
Effective date: 1 January 2025
Prepared for: CI Financial - Asset Management Operations
Classification: Client Confidential

1. Purpose and Scope

This statement describes the methodology Meridian Performance Analytics Inc. ("Meridian") applies when calculating and reporting investment performance for portfolios administered on behalf of CI Financial. It is provided for the information of the client's operations, finance and compliance functions and is reviewed annually by our Performance Oversight Committee.

The methodology set out below applies to all pooled fund mandates covered under Schedule B of the master services agreement. Where a mandate is subject to mandate-specific terms, those terms prevail. Meridian's calculations are performed in accordance with prevailing industry practice and are subject to the limitations described in Section 7.

2. Valuation

Portfolio market values are struck daily using official closing prices sourced from our primary pricing vendors, with secondary sources applied under our price challenge procedure where a primary price is unavailable or fails validation.

For holdings denominated in a currency other than the portfolio's base currency, market values are converted using the exchange rates prevailing on the valuation date. Rates are sourced from a single consolidated feed to ensure internal consistency across mandates and reporting periods.

Net asset value is reported after accrual of all liabilities known to Meridian as at the valuation point, including accrued management and administration fees.

3. Return Calculation

Meridian calculates portfolio returns on a time-weighted rate of return basis, which removes the effect of the timing and magnitude of external cash flows and therefore reflects the performance of the investment mandate rather than the behaviour of the investor. Returns are calculated at the total portfolio level and compounded to produce quarterly, annual and since-inception figures.

External cash flows comprise subscriptions and redemptions. Income distributions paid out of the fund are not treated as external cash flows; distributions are treated as reinvested at the distribution date for the purpose of return measurement, consistent with a total return presentation.

Returns are presented net of all fund operating expenses, including management fees, administration fees, and other ordinary operating costs borne by the fund. Gross returns, where shown, are presented before the deduction of these amounts.

4. Fees and Expenses

Management and administration fees are accrued in accordance with the fee schedule applicable to each mandate and are reflected in net return figures for the period in which they are accrued.

Where a mandate carries a performance fee, the fee is accrued monthly on the basis of performance measured to that month end, and is reflected in the net return for each month in which an accrual arises. Performance fee arrangements are described in the relevant offering documentation.

The expense ratio reported for each period is calculated as total fund expenses for the period expressed as a percentage of average net assets, annualised.

5. Benchmarks

Each mandate is measured against the benchmark specified in its investment policy statement. Benchmark returns are sourced directly from the relevant index provider and are used without adjustment.

Where a mandate is measured against a blended benchmark, component index returns are combined using the target weights set out in the investment policy statement. Blended benchmarks are rebalanced monthly to their target weights.

Excess return is presented as the fund return less the benchmark return for the corresponding period. Excess return figures are shown to two decimal places and may not sum across periods due to rounding and compounding.

6. Data Sources and Client Responsibilities

Meridian's calculations rely on holdings, transaction, cash flow and fee data supplied by the client or the client's administrator. Meridian applies automated validation to detect gaps, duplicates and outliers, and will query apparent anomalies, but does not independently verify the completeness or accuracy of client-supplied data.

The client is responsible for ensuring that data supplied to Meridian is complete, accurate, and free of personal information not required for the performance of the services. Meridian's data handling obligations are set out in Schedule D.

7. Limitations and Contact

Past performance is not indicative of future results. This statement describes methodology only and does not constitute investment advice. Meridian reserves the right to amend this methodology, with notice to affected clients, where required to reflect changes in market practice, regulation, or the underlying data available.

Questions concerning this statement, or requests for clarification of a specific calculation, should be directed to the Performance Oversight Committee via your Meridian client service representative, quoting the document reference above.
